

NOAH'S BANDAGE PROJECT

Noah Wilson, a 6 year old boy, was diagnosed with cancer. During the time of his treatment, he used to get many shots and would always get the boring brown bandages. Noah decided to create a project collecting "cool and fun" bandages for hospitals. He decided on this idea because many children diagnosed with cancer had lost their hair and the bandages would help show their identities and personalities. Despite all of his troubles, Noah continued to help the kids around him.

To Noah, a bandage is:

A BADGE OF COURAGE – shots and procedures hurt and can very easily bring anxiety to those who have to experience them. A bandage becomes their badge of honor showing others that they overcame something scary. It helps them show off how brave they are!

AN IDENTITY – especially on a cancer floor, where kids wear similar hospital gowns, are bald, and end up looking a lot alike, a bandage becomes a way that a child can express themselves, and share with others the things they think are cool.

FUN – Kids battling sickness of any kind need all the fun we can give them!
