NAACP sets the deadline for the achievement of its goals.

The NAACP may be setting a goal of 1963 for the achievement of its goals of full freedom for the Negro American.

In the NAACP's statement, the group said that the year 1963 was chosen because it is 100 years after the Emancipation Proclamation.

"The NAACP will work toward the achievement of full freedom for the Negro American in all the states of the U.S. by the year 1963," said Roy Wilkins, executive director of the NAACP.

The NAACP plans to achieve this goal through various methods, including legal action, public education, and political activity.

Among the goals set for 1963 are the elimination of discrimination in housing, education, employment, and voting.

"We believe that the year 1963 is a realistic target for the achievement of full freedom for the Negro American," said Wilkins.

The NAACP's statement was released in response to the recent Supreme Court decision in the case of Brown v. Board of Education.

The decision, which declared segregation in public schools unconstitutional, was seen as a major victory for the NAACP and its supporters.

The NAACP hopes that the decision will lead to further gains in the fight for full freedom for the Negro American.

"We are confident that the decision in Brown v. Board of Education is a significant step forward," said Wilkins.

The NAACP has long been a leader in the fight for civil rights, and its efforts have been instrumental in bringing about significant changes in American society.

"We have achieved a great deal in the past, and we are determined to achieve even more in the future," said Wilkins.

The NAACP's goals for 1963 are ambitious, but the group is confident that it can achieve them with the support of all Americans.

"We believe that all Americans have a stake in the achievement of full freedom for the Negro American," said Wilkins.

The NAACP has called on all Americans to support its efforts and to work toward the goal of full freedom for all Americans.

"We invite all Americans to join us in this great struggle," said Wilkins.

The NAACP has established a number of offices across the country, and it is working with a variety of organizations to achieve its goals.

"We are working with a wide range of organizations to achieve our goals," said Wilkins.

The NAACP's work continues to be funded by contributions from individuals and organizations across the country.

"We are deeply grateful for the support of all Americans," said Wilkins.

The NAACP has a long history of accomplishment, and its successes have been instrumental in bringing about significant changes in American society.

"We have a proud history of accomplishment," said Wilkins.
