Citizen's group says race, not poverty, at root of gap

By Andy Hall

Broomfield's lawsuit concludes that the group is relying on a report that says Madison schools must be avoided by the racial minorities in test scores and educational standards in order to secure fair educational opportunities for all students.

Mary Allen, a co-chair of the group's Education Committee, said that the report by a collection of groups including Schools of Hope, Social Workers, Social Service Workers, and the Wisconsin Youth and Family Center, among others, states that Madison schools are not providing adequate education for students from minority backgrounds.

"We are just waiting for the day when Madison will become a real city," Allen said.

Although AEC's report is supported by stories of poor-to-moderate black students being forced out of school, the group does not think it will change the situation.

"It's a shame that we are going to have to deal with this issue," Allen said. "We need to move past the issue and start focusing on what we can do to improve education for all students.

HELPING students of minorities achieve success in school is the focus of the Schools of Hope project, which is funded by the Wisconsin Department of Education,

"We need to work together to improve the situation," Allen said. "Let's not give up hope and let's continue to push for change."

AEC was formed to promote positive change for minorities in Madison schools.

Community involvement supported

The Schools of Hope project, which began in 1995, is supported by community organizations that work with minority students.

"We need to work together to solve this problem," said Frank Denton, a co-chair of the group.

"We need to work together to improve the situation," Allen said. "Let's not give up hope and let's continue to push for change."
