With a new governor poised to take the reins in January, a public policy group has issued a roadmap for New Jersey's future, warning that runaway housing costs, public health and educational inequities, and public transportation gaps undermine the potential of many residents.

The Fund for New Jersey convened policy experts, community leaders, and residents for a series of conversations earlier this year to come up with the policy priorities released Wednesday.

Brandon McKoy, the nonprofit's president, hopes policymakers at all levels, from Gov.-elect Mikie Sherrill "down to the dog catcher," regard the report's recommendations as marching orders from New Jersey's 9.5 million residents.

"We listened closely to what New Jerseyans told us," McKoy said. "These recommendations reflect the priorities that surfaced repeatedly and the areas where leadership is needed most."

McKoy's group, which has provided two grants to the New Jersey Monitor, listed seven policy priorities they deemed most urgent.

NJ program brings 13,500 adult learners back to school

An initiative to re-engage and re-enroll adult learners in New Jersey continues to yield remarkable results.

NJBIZ has previously reported on the Some College No Degree initiative. The program is aimed at reconnecting with the roughly 840,000 New Jersey residents who have earned some college credit but no degree.

As part of this effort, the New Jersey Office of Secretary of Higher Education has partnered with ReUp Education, an industry leader in finding, enrolling and supporting adult learners at scale. And Dec. 2, OSHE and ReUp are out with a new report highlighting the growth of the initiative since outreach began in 2023 – resulting in over 13,500 enrollments at New Jersey institutions.

Working in collaboration with the state, along with 22 participating colleges and universities in New Jersey, ReUp created a new statewide re-enrollment marketplace that centralizes outreach and coaching for learners who want to return to college.
