Brent Dieckhoff, founder and executive director of TEC21, just returned from a meeting about the Workshop Program that concluded with an interested principal sharing this takeaway: I didn't realize TEC21 was for all teachers. I thought it was just for tech-savvy teachers. Another principal, Brent shares, jumped in to say that at her school in another state, she sent teachers from all grade levels, EC-8, and all skill levels every year.

TEC21, Brent emphasizes, is designed to meet every teacher where they are in understanding and application of technology, and hundreds of testimonials from participating Lutheran school teachers affirm this is true. "Cohorts gain fresh, relevant and practical lessons," he says, "to equip them to use technology to enhance the learning experience and opportunities for their students. Every TEC21 teacher, regardless of skill level and age or subject matter taught, receives a potent mix of content, technology skill development, and teaching strategies/pedagogy."

With the added benefit of warm support from like-minded facilitators and peers inside the TEC21 community, Dieckhoff adds, "we quickly dispel any fear of joining a cohort, giving our educators a tremendous gateway to confidence and mastery that translates to student performance and quality of learning."
