

Helen Law

Helen Law grew up in Tallahassee, Florida and then later in Knoxville, Tennessee. She received her undergraduate degree at the University of Tennessee-Knoxville in Ecology and Evolutionary Biology. Since then, she has lived in Chicago for about 2 years and now resides in West Lafayette, Indiana, where she is pursuing a PhD in Botany and Plant Pathology at Purdue University. Her primary research interests are in fungal evolutionary history, trait-based phylogenetic analyses, and dispersal mechanisms. In her free time, she likes to hike, garden, and try her hand at fermenting a variety of drinks and food.
