At first glance, Bert is a musician, but on a deeper level, he is an artist who is constantly reinventing his craft. His writing, performing, engineering, and producing music integrate more than just the mechanics of the craft. His music draws on his passion in everything he does. As a multi-talented instrumentalist and singer, Bert, as "Garrison" also engages his audiences with his warm vocal style and his artistic expressions.

From studying with Cleveland Orchestra members as a boy, to becoming a Nashville Cat, performing in the streets of Europe, and on to continued education at Berklee College of Music in Boston, Bert honed his craft and extended his talents beyond live performance. His entrepreneurial launch of Bert Elliott Sound, Inc., a thriving audio post production company for 45 years, has enabled Bert to concentrate on his own projects.

As a producer and sound designer, Bert Elliott is capturing the history of our aging generations, including veterans, history makers, and people with a compelling story... in their own words.

These conversations will be invaluable to future generations, who, unfortunately are not being exposed to much of their family and community history. Elliott says, "I am always excited to listen to and document these fascinating gems of history using not only audio, but photography, video, and music".

Bert has a long career of audio and video production, including soundtracks for documentary films in museums, Grammy nominated album projects, and commercial voice-over recordings for many Fortune 500 companies. He has an extensive library of original music as well, and has produced many published audio books over the years.

Bert's life as a thriving musician encompasses both signature audio production and creative and memorable live performance.
