He is a pediatrician and health services researcher focused on improving and measuring the quality of pediatric care for high risk children affected by social determinants of health, violence, neglect, alcohol, drug use or mental disorders. He has been continuously funded by NIH since shortly after completing his training in 1990 and is now the PI on projects from NIMH, AHRQ, and CMS/CMMI. He is involved in strategy development for the Nationwide Children's Healthy Neighborhood, Healthy Family zone focusing on neighborhood leaders, community agencies and related partnerships to improve housing, employment, schools and safety on the Near South Side of Columbus.

Description of Presentation:

Healthcare for children takes credit for marked improvement in child outcomes over the past 50 years for many if not most medical and surgical conditions. Unfortunately, the behavioral health of children does not show the same progress, and, instead, is characterized by worsening suicide rates, emergency room use, psychiatric drug prescriptions and anxiety. Moreover, behavioral healthcare has not kept pace with rapid changes in digital medicine, consumer-oriented healthcare and team approaches. Is it because physicians are a barrier to change? What models are likely to be more effective going forward? How can community interventions be employed? Reviewing the evidence of largescale trends in pediatric care suggests that new models are required for integration of behavioral health into pediatrics.

Learning Objectives:

1. Participants will be able to consider financial and consumer trends in strategic planning.
2. Participants will be able to shape their practice staffing and format for future trends.
3. Participants will be able to modify training programs for staff and future clinicians in light of practice change.
