FEATURING STEPHANIE BOLTON

Research & Education and Sustainable Winegrowing Director
Lodi Winegrape Commission

"10 Exciting Things Happening in Lodi Viticulture Right Now"

Stephanie Bolton leads the Grower Research, Education, & Communications initiatives for the Lodi Winegrape Commission, along with the LODI RULES program. Bolton provides targeted and daily support to Lodi winegrape growers in the areas of advanced grower education and outreach, marketing and promotions of the region's diverse winegrapes, and – most notably – viticultural research and sustainability programming, including Lodi's world-renowned LODI RULES sustainable winegrowing certification program. The Lodi AVA (CA Crush District 11) contains over 100,000 acres of grapevines, with a unique profile where new vineyard plantings exist alongside century-old vines, soil types range from sandy loam to volcanic terrain, and just about every trellising system invented is being used. In this dynamic region, Bolton's role is key in facilitating effective networking and scientific communication for progressive winegrowing among the 750 farmers in the community – linking growers to the resources they need to farm to their full potential. Stephanie received her BA in chemistry from Wake Forest University, and her MS in Food Science and Technology and Ph.D. in Plant Pathology from the University of Georgia.
