FEATURING MICHELA CENTINARI

Associate Professor of Viticulture
Penn State University

Michela Centinari is an associate professor of viticulture in the department of Plant Science at Penn State. She works as part of a multidisciplinary grape research and extension team to address the needs of the Eastern US wine industry. Her program investigates the effects of environmental factors, cultural practices, and biotic stressors on grapevine physiology, production, and fruit and wine quality. Prior to her position at Penn State, she was a post-doctoral scholar at Cornell University.

Michela is originally from Italy; she completed her PhD at the University of Bologna.
