FEATURING MAHA AFIFI

Senior Research Scientist
California Table Grape Commission

Addressing California Table Grape Industry Needs Through Scientific Research

Maha Afifi leads the California Table Grape Commission projects focusing on water management and color improvement. Her research addresses a number of complex viticulture issues of table grapes grown in different regions of California. She is also involved in several viticulture research projects in collaboration with USDA and UC researchers, providing the expertise needed.

Maha represents the commission in the National Grape Research Alliance (NGRA) Natural Resources and Environment as well as Extension and Outreach committees providing inputs to address the table grape industry needs when creating research proposals of strategic importance to all grape sectors in the U.S.

Prior to joining the commission in 2015, Maha gained educational and cultural experience from studying and traveling worldwide. Maha earned her BSc and MSc in horticulture from Ain Shams University, Egypt, and her Ph.D. in grapevine physiology from Toulouse University, France.
