Ekal runs single-teacher schools for children between the ages of 6-14. About 25 - 30 children are enrolled in each school. Talented local youth are selected and trained to be effective teachers. Of these, approximately 2/3rd are women. In addition to providing education to the children, the teachers are a catalyst for change and help empower the villagers.

Ekal provides children with opportunities to escape poverty, gain a voice in their community and experience a better quality of life.

The Ekal Movement helps unite villagers, while sparking a passion for education among tribal children. The Movement also transcends social impediments like inter-tribal rivalry, excessive alcohol consumption, and superstitions. Villagers are empowered to become self-reliant, and help others around them. Ekal schools have a transformational influence in rural and tribal communities.

Ekal teacher is selected by the village committee, usually a local youth who is trained at the Ekal teacher training center. In addition to providing basic literacy skills, the teachers also become catalysts for change that unite the village around a common purpose.

India's demographic consists of 600,000 villages, of which over *134,000 are remotely located. Ekal trains the villagers in rural based activities to augment their income under Gramothan Yojna. It operates Gramothan Resource Centers (GRC) in several states, such as, West Bengal, Maharashtra, Jharkhand, Odisha, Tamil Nadu & Uttar Pradesh. The GRC provides required skill training to farmers in organic farming, small scale vocation, vermin compost beds and more.
