MODELS OF CARE IN PEDIATRIC PAIN AND ILLNESS

This inaugural event of NCAPP's pediatric subdivision will feature three established clinicians from different disciplines and backgrounds (psychology, integrative medicine, pediatrics, behavioral medicine) from three different organizations (UCSF's Pediatric Pain and Palliative Care Clinic, the Osher Center, and the Stanford Pediatric Pain Clinic), who will each speak to their inter/multidisciplinary models of care and treatment programs for youth with chronic pain and illness. In this workshop we will explore options offered by our local pediatric pain community, and raise awareness of current issues in pediatric pain. Discussion to follow.

MODELS OF CARE IN PEDIATRIC PAIN AND ILLNESS

Brittany Blockman, MD, MA, is an Associate Physician Diplomate at the UCSF Osher Center for Integrative Medicine and Clinical Instructor in Pediatrics at UCSF, where she provides integrative consultations for youth living with a wide spectrum of chronic illnesses. She established and runs an insurance-billed, mind-body group for youth living with chronic illness, which is becoming a model for other UCSF programs. Prior to her current position at the Osher Center, she completed a two-year clinical fellowship in integrative medicine at the Osher Center and residency in the UCSF Pediatric Leadership for the Underserved (PLUS) residency program. During her residency, she founded Communitas Health, a non-profit organization that provides immersive, integrative medicine education, peer support, and empowerment with self-care skills for youth living with chronic illness and their families.

Samantha Huestis, PhD is a clinical assistant professor in the Department of Anesthesiology, Perioperative, and Pain Medicine at Stanford University School of Medicine, and psychologist in the Pediatric Pain Management Clinic at Stanford Children's Health. After earning her doctorate from Case Western Reserve University she completed fellowships at the Yale Child Study Center and Stanford School of Medicine. She has published on collaborative patient-provider communications, patient-centered outcomes tracking, and value of peer and multi-family group therapies. Dr. Huestis champions strength-based approaches to fostering resilience over risk as youth learn to live beyond pain.
