Fundamental Critical Care

Support: Obstetrics

April 25-26, 2025 7:30 AM - 4:45 PM

The Division of Maternal Fetal Medicine in the Department of Obstetrics, Gynecology, & Reproductive Sciences and Surgery and the Division of Critical Care Medicine in the Department of Anesthesia and Perioperative Care proudly present the Society of Critical Care Medicine course: Fundamental Critical Care Support: Obstetrics (FCCS: OB) which provides training specific to treating the critically ill or injured pregnant patient.

TARGET AUDIENCE

The Fundamental Critical Care Support: Obstetrics (FCCS:OB) course is recommended for intensivist and non-intensivist healthcare professionals who may provide maternal/fetal critical care and for clinicians in obstetrics seeking critical care training.

OBJECTIVES

At the completion of the course, learners will be able to:

- Assess physiologic changes of pregnancy differently.
- Apply new knowledge of maternal obstetric and medical conditions to diagnosis.
- Refine treatment regimens for certain maternal obstetric conditions.
- Apply new knowledge to performance of maternal CPR and airway management in the care of the critically ill pregnant patient.
- Apply appropriate steps for fetal assessment, delivery and neonatal management in practice
- More appropriately refer obstetric patients that may need expert consultation and/or transfer.
- Work more effectively with critical care and/or obstetric clinicians as a result of being more familiar with the other's best practices and how to incorporate them.
