DREAMCATCHERS ARE A FASCINATING PIECE OF NATIVE AMERICAN TRADITION

Native Americans believe that the air is filled with dreams. The purpose of the dreamcatcher is to protect the sleeper from bad dreams and allow the good ones through. Made of hooped rings, they are weaved together with feathers, arrowheads, and beads. Native Americans hold the ring in high esteem, symbolizing strength and unity.

I have always been captivated by experiences. I thrive off of learning about a new place's history, culture, and food. So it was no surprise to my parents when, as a small child, I asked if we could visit a nearby Monacan Indian tribe that held Pow Wows and invited anyone interested in attending. At six years old, I was in awe of the deeply rooted ties and traditions, and we went back every year. This was the year I bought my first dream catcher. From my child's perspective, it was pretty and would look fantastic over my bed.

It would be years before I would appreciate the handmade and authentic nature. Many small things are woven together to create one big meaningful thing, like our team. Individually we may be small, but working together, we are mighty.

We all offer something special and unique, which translates into providing exceptional experiences to our guests. As the Newport team acts as your dreamcatcher, you to your guests. We can make their dreams memorable. Sometimes it will just be a good night's sleep on a work trip, and other times something much more special.
