The Congressional Sportsmen's Foundation and partners in the sporting-conservation community invite you to a virtual policy briefing to discuss the importance of including robust natural infrastructure and conservation investments as part of any infrastructure and job creation legislation. Congress has long recognized the impact our nation's transportation policies and associated infrastructure have on our nation's fish and wildlife, habitat, and recreational access opportunities. Additionally, investments in the outdoor recreation economy will help facilitate near-term economic growth at a time when communities, particularly those in rural areas, need it the most.

This virtual policy briefing will consist of a panel of stakeholders and experts from the conservation community who will discuss the varying interests that have historically been included in infrastructure packages. The panel will also discuss new opportunities to invest in natural infrastructure to conserve fish, wildlife, and their associated habitats while simultaneously enhancing outdoor recreation.

Panelists

Chris Horton, Congressional Sportsmen's Foundation

Sarah Murdock, The Nature Conservancy

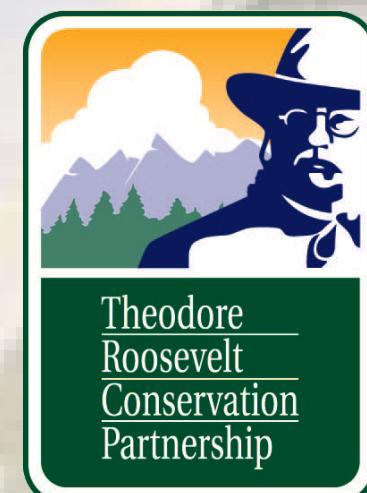

Collin O'Mara, National Wildlife Federation
