

Appalachian Diabetes Control and Prevention Project Morgan County, Kentucky

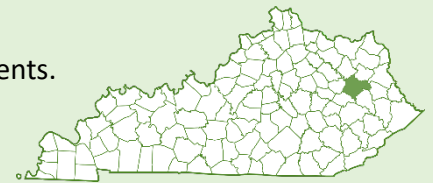

COALITION HIGHLIGHTS

Super Star Chefs: Coalition members have implemented this program in partnership with a local wellness center. This program is an intensive 4-day cooking class offered during the summer. The classes are hands-on and include information about nutrition, healthy eating and basic cooking skills. It helps teach children the importance of nutrition, but also the safety skills that go along with being in the kitchen. The program aims to change perceptions that healthy eating can be fun, taste good and improve their well-being. Participants take home recipes, aprons and cooking utensils to help them continue using their new skills in their own kitchen. Twenty-one youth have completed the program in Morgan County.

Local Health Fairs: Coalition members participate in a variety of health fairs throughout the year. Locations include hospitals, middle schools, and other community locations.

Back-to-School Events: Coalition members participate in various back-to-school events. Coalition members provide recipes to students and parents and distribute samples of the recipes.

Senior Program: Coalition members conduct health education and physical Activity programs with seniors at the Morgan County, KY senior center quarterly.

SUCCESS STORY

Youth Veggie Bucks: Coalition members collaborated to implement this youth nutrition education program during the summer months. The Morgan County Farmer's Market, the Appalachia Regional Hospital, UK Extension, and the local health department provide youth with recipes and samples of healthy dishes that use locally grown produce. Youth receive $5.00 vouchers that they can use to purchase fruits and vegetables from vendors at the market. Annually, this program generates $2,000 - $2,500 in revenue for local farmers and reaches approximately 800 youth annually.
