

The right to live in the community.

Persons with disabilities have the right to live in homes in the community with the services they need. This could be in a home with one's family, or to create a family of one's own. Cases that involve this tenet involve ensuring adequate community based services so persons can move out of nursing homes or other institutional-based environments, or ensuring that people have the services they need to ensure that families stay together.