AN INTERACTIVE THEATRICAL EXPERIENCE
ABOUT POLICE AND COMMUNITY RELATIONS

You Have the Right to Remain Heard (YHTRTRH) is a documentary theatre piece about the challenging relationship between Black and Brown youth and police.

YHTRTRH was developed from a grassroots theatre-based intervention involving interactive workshops with youth and police officers.

The hour-long theatrical presentation includes an ensemble of five actors, portraying members of the community, youth and police officers in episodic dramatic and comedic scenes.

The post-production talk-back serves as a platform for engagement, reflection, and action, empowering audiences to consider ways to support shifts in the policing of our communities, where indicated.

Written by Juan Ramirez • directed by Donathan Walters choreography by Tislam Boule • original music by Iman Bundridge
Contributing writers include: Candido Tirado, Stephanie Berry & Cassandra Medley

The afternoon will include an audience talk back.

We are proud to present the premiere of this new documentary theater piece that explores the complex relationship between youth and police. The production features original music, a five member ensemble portraying both community members and police officers. It serves as a powerful theatrical response to one of today's most urgent social issues.

The work grew from Blackberry Productions' COPP Project (Communities Organizing for Partnership in Peace), a theater-based intervention program. The event features a post-production talk-back.

FREE. LIMITED SEATING.
