Introducing Rightfiber: A New Name, a Continued Commitment to Our Communities

You may notice a new name in our community: Rightfiber. Formed in 2026 through the combination of Ritter Communications and Great Plains Communications, Rightfiber brings together more than a century of telecommunications experience under one forward-looking brand.

While our name is new, our local roots run deep. As Great Plains Communications, we served [Nebraska] communities for more than 115 years. As Rightfiber, we are building on that legacy with expanded resources and capabilities while maintaining the responsive local service, reliable connections, and community investment our customers and partners have come to expect.

Rightfiber delivers world-class fiber internet, video, data center, and wholesale communications services to residential, business, and carrier customers. Today, we serve more than 400 communities across 20 states through a growing, national fiber network built for what's next.

We offer a full suite of scalable connectivity and technology solutions, including fiber internet, voice, data center, Cloud, SD-Wan, and managed services, to help organizations operate efficiently, exceed their customers' expectations, and grow with confidence. With Rightfiber, you get the best of both worlds: the technology and resources of a growing fiber network, backed by local people who know your community and are committed to delivering the best customer experience in the industry.

Customers can continue to expect the same local team members they know and the trusted services they have learned to rely on. We are grateful for the opportunity to provide essential connectivity across our network and to empower customers and communities to achieve lasting success.
