

Congress of the United States

July 17, 2026

The Honorable Donald J. Trump
President of the United States
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue NW
Washington, DC 20500

Dear President Trump:

We write to thank you and your Administration for your recent actions approving critical crop protection technologies and new-use pesticide registrations that have already completed the Environmental Protection Agency's (EPA) scientific review. These actions will provide U.S. growers with additional tools to effectively manage weeds, protect crop yields and enhance regenerative farming practices. America's farmers and ranchers continue to work tirelessly to keep our nation's food supply secure, stable, and affordable. We appreciate your Administration's continued engagement with rural communities and your efforts to strengthen American agriculture by placing new crop technologies in the hands of farmers.

Farmers across the United States continue to face rising input costs, unpredictable markets, and mounting pressures from foreign competitors who benefit from faster regulatory timelines and greater access to modern crop protection tools. American producers rely on the EPA's robust and timely review of innovative new pesticide tools so they can continue to produce a safe, sustainable, and affordable food supply for the world. We appreciate the Administration's recent actions to make new, efficient tools available to farmers, and it is essential that the EPA continue to move scientifically reviewed crop protection innovations through the regulatory pipeline, so farmers have timely access to new tools.

Unlocking these critical pesticide products and new-use applications, many of which are already available to farmers in Europe, Canada, Brazil, and other major agricultural nations, shows this Administration's continued commitment to the American farmer. These tools are essential for managing pests, combating resistance, protecting yields, and helping farmers maintain stable, affordable food production.

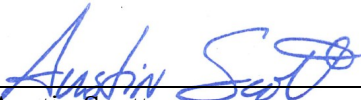

Your recent actions demonstrate your Administration's commitment to supporting farmers and strengthening rural economies. Ensuring timely decisions on completed pesticide registration reviews is an important part of that commitment. When producers face delays, they may lose access to safe, modern technologies that help maintain yields, keep food affordable, and preserve the competitiveness of U.S. agriculture in global markets. U.S. agricultural exports exceed $170 billion annually, and these setbacks threatened more than individual operations, they jeopardized America's position in global markets and weaken rural economies nationwide.

We appreciate the Administration's dedication to fostering innovation and maintaining rigorous safety standards through the EPA's regulatory review process. Predictable and transparent decision making helps ensure that companies continue to invest in the next generation of crop protection tools, resulting in technologies that keep farmers productive, competitive, and sustainable. A clear, timely path to final action encourages these innovations to remain here in the United States.

We thank you for your Administration's work to move forward on these fully reviewed products and applications. Your actions reinforce confidence in the regulatory system, support the scientific work EPA has already completed, and provide farmers with the certainty they need to plan and produce.

Thank you again for your attention to this issue and we look forward to continuing to work together to support America's agricultural producers.

Sincerely,

Austin Scott
