Peripheral Vascular

Disease (PVD) is the most common venous and arterial disease which affects millions of people around the world; this disorder affects 8.5 million individuals in the United States alone. Traditionally, treatment and procedures utilized to relieve the symptoms associated with this debilitating disorder are performed in a hospital-based setting. As a common practice, patients arrived early to check in for their procedure and subsequently were required to spend the night for observation. This was a common dissatisfier amongst the patients.

Today, the New Standard is to perform these same procedures in an Outpatient Based Lab (OBL). The same procedure coupled with new advancement in technique, technology, equipment, quality of care, and safety measures these procedures are now performed with Minimal Risk. The outcomes are equal to/or better than these procedures performed in the hospital and is staffed with the same well-trained, highly experienced staff.

Medicare and most insurances will cover these procedures performed in the outpatient-based laboratory (OBL) due to the excellent patient outcomes and cost effectiveness.
