DC is already known for its well-educated workforce, Federal government resources, friendly environment for women entrepreneurs, and a growing reputation for socially-oriented business. Conversely, the District also contends with income and wealth inequality, and competition from other cities and regions for people and business. How is DC doing on diversifying its labor force and job pool? How can the District better support and sustain entrepreneurship? What can we learn from pushing forward DC's innovation ecosystem and building momentum for the impact economy?

Join us for the next Economic Intelligence Roundtable brought to you by DC's Office of the Deputy Mayor for Planning and Economic Development (DMPED) in partnership with the DC Chamber of Commerce. This time, our program will focus on the direction of DC's innovation economy. This discussion timely for the Month of #innoMAYtion, will feature remarks from Deputy Mayor Brian Kenner; a keynote presentation from Jeannette Chapman, Deputy Director and Senior Research Associate in the Stephen S. Fuller Institute; and invited panelists representing expertise with the innovation economy, workforce development, and labor/job market.

There is no cost to participate in the event but advance registration is required due to space limitations. Please register by Friday, May 5, 2017 by going to <https://goo.gl/AgHDKy>

#innoMAYtion is Mayor Bowser's month-long initiative showcasing how ideas from local entrepreneurs and innovators are making the District a global model for inclusive innovation.
