

National Alliance on Mental Illness

Presents a documentary screening of People Say I'm Crazy

"Brave, scary and beautifully insightful"

Time Out New York

"Extremely affecting"

The New York Times

"People Say I'm Crazy is a documentary that every person and every family in America should see."

Michael J. Fitzpatrick, former Executive Director of NAMI

Directed by John Cadigan, produced by Academy Award Winner Ira Wohl and Katie Cadigan

"People Say I'm Crazy" is a documentary about schizophrenia made by someone with schizophrenia. This film tells the story of a young man, John Cadigan, who develops schizophrenia at age 21 while attending college. Initially devastated by his diagnosis, John eventually finds appropriate treatment and works his way into recovery, with the help of family and friends. The spotlight is also turned on John's family as they struggle to understand John's disease. With courage and love, the family learns how to support John in his efforts to resume living an independent and fulfilling life. To view the trailer go to: <http://www.peoplesayimcrazy.org/>

February 16, 2017

at

The Picture House

175 Wolfs Lane, Pelham, NY 10803

Doors open 6 p.m. -- Screening begins at 6:15 p.m.

Panel Discussion to follow screening with leading professionals in the field of schizophrenia and individuals living in recovery.

Tickets $15 per person

Tickets must be purchase in advance by February 12, 2017

To purchase go to: <https://www.eventbrite.com/e/nami-westchester-presents-people-say-im-crazy-tickets-29225534360>