CME Team Heads to ACCME 2025 Conference – Bringing Back New Insights and Inspiration

Last week, members of our Continuing Medical Education (CME) department had an exciting opportunity to attend the annual 2025 ACCME (Accreditation Council for Continuing Medical Education) Conference in windy, Chicago, IL. Erica Boothe and Lorna Della represented our team and joined more than 530 CME professionals from across the country to learn, connect, and get inspired. The conference brought together leaders, educators, vendors and innovators in Accreditation to explore new strategies, tools, and trends in medical education.

Throughout the conference, our team participated in dynamic sessions focused on learner engagement, measuring outcomes, best practices for mitigating conflicts in disclosures and the evolving role of AI in CME processes. We also connected with peers from other organizations, exchanging ideas and gaining fresh perspectives on how to better serve our learners and support clinical excellence.

We're energized by what we've learned and look forward to bringing back insights that will help enhance our CME programs, align with ACCME best practices, and continue making a meaningful impact on patient and physician care. Stay tuned—over the coming weeks, we'll be sharing key takeaways and how we plan to apply them here at MedChi, first with the introduction to our new, highly anticipated CME application.

Thank you for supporting our professional growth and commitment to continuous learning!

Partnering with MedChi gives your organization access to our extensive network of healthcare professionals. Whether it's live events, online courses, or enduring materials, MedChi can help you deliver impactful education.
