Lent, Holy Week, and Easter in the (Continuing) Age of Pandemic
A Message from Pastor Paul Forrey

Last year, our experience of Lent was cut short by the onset and initial spread of the pandemic in our country. For the first time, we were unable to come together for worship and fellowship during a most sacred period in the church year, particularly Holy Week and Easter. We transitioned to a video devotional format as best we could, but it just wasn't the same.

It certainly appears that we will be able to continue sanctuary worship through all of Lent this year, and we look forward to the Maundy Thursday service and Easter services. While we are not planning family activities such as the Palm Saturday family activity or our Spring movie night, at least we can take comfort in knowing that worship services will continue.

At the same time, we know that these services won't be the same. A significant portion of our congregation will not return to sanctuary services until they and more of us have received a vaccination, and we will not be able to praise God together as we love to on Easter.

We continue, even though some of our shared life together is starting to look a bit more familiar, in a time of change and upheaval. But this is not the first time (or the last) that the church has sought to thrive during tumultuous times. Sometime in the middle of the first century, St. Paul wrote to the community in Ephesus experiencing significant change, conflicting customs, and shifting social realities.

Paul wrote, "In Christ Jesus you who were once far off have been brought near" (Ephesians 2:13). He was referring to ways that people of diverse religious and social backgrounds can become one people in the church that ministers in Jesus' name.

"In Christ Jesus you who were once far off have been brought near." St. Paul's words speak, certainly, to our fractured society today. During deep division and hostility, the apostle reminds us that unity in Christ doesn't mean that our differences don't matter or that we should conform to one way of thinking and living, but that through the presence of Christ we can live together peacefully—because Christ holds all of our differences within himself. Christ unites us in a religious and social movement that does not allow the barriers we erect to separate people to endure.

"In Christ Jesus you who were once far off have been brought near." Paul's words also remind us that, though all of us do not yet share together in Sunday morning worship, we are still the church—a holy people that God in Christ weaves together whether we are near or far. We are the beloved community of Christ empowered for ministries of healing, reconciling, and hoping.

Last month, the Worship Team asked us to keep in regular communication with one another. In a sense, they asked us to see that, though we are far off from one another, we can be brought near through the love and power of Jesus Christ. Let's keep up this practice, particularly as we move into Holy Week and Easter. May our praise on Easter morning announce that God in Christ always raises up our love and compassion for one another, and that nothing—not even physical separation—can keep us apart.

“In Christ Jesus you who were once far off have been brought near.”

Patricia and I offer you our love and blessing!
