

TRENT BOONE – The team has gained a lot of resilience throughout this season. For many of us on the team, it had been over a year since we last had the opportunity to race at a regatta, yet the whole team is working just as hard, if not harder, than before Covid restrictions went into effect last March. As we transition into the winter season, I'm looking forward to seeing many of the younger guys on the team find their speed. The first varsity winter season is often where many of the rowers who were on the novice team the year before truly start to realize their speed and potential and it's a joy to be able to watch over the course of the winter.

SAM TERRY – I think that our Fall season was a really nice wakeup call. The boys learned that ergs aren't everything and that the competition out there is much more than it seems. We are not the same team we were two years ago, or even last year, so we must prove that we're more than just talk. I am super pumped about winter as we've got some incredibly fast guys this year and I know we're only gonna get faster as a crew.
