Charo Arnold, Mandeville mom and neonatal nurse, was 16-weeks pregnant with Mila Grace when she was diagnosed with an aggressive form of breast cancer. Our multidisciplinary team of specialists delivered the best possible outcomes: Charo is cancer-free thanks to treatment before and after the birth of her daughter.

The Healing Arts Initiative promotes art as a core component of healthcare and the healing process in the hospital and its outpatient facilities. The initiative has completely outfitted the Women's Pavilion and the infusion area in our cancer center with art, sculptures and natural elements.

Through collaboration and technology in the St. Tammany Cancer Center, Winifred Orr, a retiree and avid traveler, is cancer free and planning a trip to Italy with her husband. "When you feel good, you have lots of energy and want to do things," she said. "I'm ready for new challenges."

Since 2005, the Rich Mauti Tennis Classic raises funds to benefit early detection and education efforts on the Northshore. This year, Rich says he experienced the importance of this program first-hand, "I was screened and was positive for skin cancer. I have since had my Basil Cell removed, but the whole navigation and follow-up process was incredible. Early detection is KEY."
