READ

Women of the Dawn, University of Nebraska Press, available online through several book sellers. Approximately $15.00.

Women of the Dawn is a personal biography of 3 Wabanaki women who lived in Maine, Massachusetts and one of whom was a fine dancer who studied and lived in France then returned to Maine. The stories are drawn from historical source documents, interviews with a historian who knew one of the Wabanaki women and writings about the seasonal migration pattern of the Wabanaki people.

WATCH

The Anti-Racism Working Group suggests watching Dawnland. Dawnland is the untold story of indigenous children removed in the US through the nation's first Truth and Reconciliation Commission. This commission investigated the disturbing impact of Maine's Child Welfare practices regarding the Wabanaki people. You can find Dawnland on PBS.org.

TAKE ACTION

For those who want a broad understanding of various types of injustice the Anti-Racism Working Group suggests that you subscribe to the Anti-Racism Daily. The Anti-Racism Daily covers various topics such as: No knock police entry and the killing of Breonna Taylor, Japanese Internment camps and the trauma resulting from such internment, financial injustice such as bank redlining, and an analysis of Social Work practice, etc.

To subscribe to the Anti-Racism Daily go to <https://www.antiracismdaily.com/> and hit the subscribe button. The service is free but readers are encouraged to pay either a monthly fee or a one-time subscription fee. The Daily arrives as an email in your inbox early in the day.
