KORACH Moses and Aaron's authority is challenged twice: first by Korah, a Levite who gathers 250 Israelite nobles, and then by Dathan and Abiram, who claim that Egypt, not Canaan, is the true land of milk and honey. Moses suggests that fire-pans of incense be brought to test Korah's claims, but God threatens the rebels' immediate destruction. Moses and Aaron beg for clemency, but as predicted by Moses, the earth swallows the rebels and their possessions (Korah's sons are spared). God orders that the rebels' fire pans be attached to the Tabernacle altar to remind the people of the attempted insurrection. But the Israelites criticize God's punishment, leading to a plague that kills 14,700. Next, God demands that the tribal leaders deposit a staff into the Tent of Meeting. Aaron's staff sprouts almonds, serving as another reminder of recent events. The Israelites now fear approaching the Tabernacle. God assures that only Levites can be punished for trespassing. To ease the Levites' burden, God outlines the sacred gifts that they and the priests will receive.
