Survival Skills for Teachers: Strategies for Strengthening Family Engagement

Research indicates that students with involved parents are more likely to perform better in school, enroll in higher level programs, more regularly attend school, and demonstrate positive behavior and social skills, regardless of socio-economic or cultural backgrounds.

Successfully engaging parents requires skillful teachers who can effectively utilize research-based strategies. Join us to learn and expand your skill set in building family relationships to create a welcoming environment, improve communication with parents of all backgrounds, and include parents in decision-making.

The presenters will share winning tips to help make your classroom an enriched learning environment based on supportive family engagement.
