CAAHEP President Dr. Barry S. Eckert commended the graduates, saying, “Providing

The mission of CAAHEP is quality assurance in health sciences and health professions education by setting standards for program accreditation and evaluating program performance. As each program is reviewed, CAAHEP remains focused on each profession’s standards and quality outcomes to ensure that every CAAHEP-accredited program prepares students to enter their chosen health profession. We congratulate the graduates of the Technical College of the Rockies Diagnostic Medical Sonography program. They are prepared, and we wish them success in their sonography careers.”

Graduates of this first cohort expressed excitement about completing a CAAHEP-accredited program. “This program has been both incredibly challenging and deeply rewarding. I am confident that the education we received has prepared us to become successful sonographers. Being CAAHEP accredited was the icing on the cake—it reinforced the quality of our training and gave us confidence that we are on the path to becoming some of the best sonographers in the field,” stated Brittany Lesperance. Another graduate, Emily Lange, remarked, “My time in ultrasound school has been intense, humbling, and incredibly rewarding. From long clinical days to tough scans that pushed me out of my comfort zone, every experience played a role in building my confidence and shaping me into the sonographer I am today. This program challenged me in every way, both academically and clinically, but it ultimately prepared me to provide compassionate, high-quality patient care. Through hands-on experience and supportive mentorship, I’ve gained the confidence and skills needed to step into my role as a sonographer and make a meaningful impact in healthcare.”
