

NHMA College Health Scholars Program

The NHMA is collaborating for Year 2 with the Charles R. Drew University, University of the Incarnate Word and the AAMC as well as UCLA Center for the Study of Latinos and the University of California Riverside Medical School on NHMA College Health Scholars Conferences. Students in their freshman or sophomore year in college who are interested in applying to graduate schools: medical, dental, public health, nursing or graduate science are invited to the conferences to learn from experts about academic and personal development skills and financing their education. Note that the speakers are from Admissions Committees, Faculty and Health Professional Students. In addition, the conferences have Recruiters from regional or national health professional schools representing the 5 disciplines. See our website for valuable information to improve acceptance to these schools: <https://www.nhmamd.org/programs/nhma-chsp/>.

We want to thank all of the NHMA members who have signed up to be a mentor for the next generation of health professionals! If you have any questions about the NHMA College Health Scholars Program, please contact Ben Melano at bmelano@nhmamd.org.
