As a group, Black American Muslims experience a range of challenges due to anti-Black racism and Islamophobia.

Muslims who identify as Black experience the same systemic racism that all Black Americans face in their day-to-day lives, in addition to the religious discrimination faced by many Americans who are Muslim. Moreover, Muslims are often thought of as being only Arab or South Asian, rendering Black Muslims less visible, thus leaving them out of the conversation, and creating a dearth of information about their experiences. Join us as we learn more about Black American Muslims and what we can do to better understand this group of dynamic and diverse individuals.
