- NEW PHASES AND VARIATIONS
- A STAPLE OF THE MERGER ERA OF RAILROADING
- MANY LIGHTING FEATURES INCLUDING FLASHING BEACONS AND FROG EYE LIGHTS
- RETOOLED ROOF PROFILE FOR CLOSER PROTOTYPE ACCURACY

General Electric had long been touted as a company that supplied parts for other manufacturers. That would all change with GE's entry into a road-switcher market dominated by EMD and Alco. In the late 1950s, GE's engineers were developing a new V16 engine. What followed was the creation of the U25B road switcher. Available in both high-nose and low-nose variants, GE would sell over 450 U25Bs to a variety of Class I railroads. The U25B would pave the way for future Universal series locomotives.

Many U25Bs lasted into the early 1980s on some Class I railroads. A few ex-L&N versions would continue on to the late 1980s on CSX! A notable user of the U25B was Rock Island, which equipped a few of theirs with "frog eye lights" on the sides of the cab roof. These lights could alternate or shine steady. Get ready for a new run with new schemes on the popular U25B locomotive!

THE RAPIDO U25B LOCOMOTIVE FEATURES:

- NEW Phase IV units representing late U25Bs and early U28Bs
- Working "frog eye lights" (Rock Island and MEC #225 and #228)
- Improved thinner front and rear handrails
- Single front window or NEW double front window
- Both low and high-short hood versions
- SP features the full light package
- ESU LokSound and MoPower for sound equipped models
- Flat or NEW sloped low nose
- New side sill mounted handrails on Phase IV units
- Early high- and later low- style side doors
- Road specific details for each model
- Different exhaust stacks (depending on roadname)
- Road-specific battery box doors on engineer's side
