Build a Bouquet or Bundle

To begin making a wreath, you first begin by making a small bouquet or a bundle of greenery and decorative items that look good in a small bunch. Think of it like a small bouquet you'll be putting into a vase. If you like how it would look in a vase all on its own, you'll love it when added to your wreath. Hold the bundle tightly in your hands and use your clippers to trim off any longer stems to make them all even.

Add Bouquet to Wreath Form

Before adding your first bundle of greenery to your wreath form, secure your wire to the form by wrapping it around a couple of times. Next, lay your bundle down onto the wreath form and wrap that wire around the base of the bundle a few times to secure it tightly to the form.

Repeat Until the Wreath is Full

Continue with steps one and two until your wreath form is full. It's best to try and keep your bundles about the same size. This will create a nice uniform wreath!

Add Final Bundle & Fill In the Gaps

Place the final bundle onto the wreath form. If you have an extra set of hands around, it might be helpful for securing that last bundle. I found having someone carefully move the first bundle out of the way while securing the last bundle helpful. Once you get greenery around the entire form, hold the wreath up and check for any gaps or thin areas. Then turn the wreath around and look from the back for any more gaps. If you have any gaps, go ahead and fill them in with some smaller bouquets and secure them with the wire.

Cut & Secure Wire

After adding your final bundle, you want to make sure the wire won't come undone. Cut the wire and secure it to the wreath form by twisting it around a few times, making a loop and dragging it back through.

Add Decorations

If you want to add some additional embellishments to your wreath, now is the time to do so. You could add some Christmas ornaments, pinecones, bows, etc.
