NCTA "Lunch and Learn" Program

Turning Lunch Time into Learn Time

To protect their patients during the COVID-19 pandemic, community oncology practices have severely restricted access to their facilities. Responding to practice professionals' need to continue receiving continuing education, the Community Oncology Alliance's National Cancer Treatment Alliance (NCTA) is pleased to introduce its new offering, the "Lunch and Learn" program, which offers free ongoing education to your team over lunch.

What is the Lunch and Learn Program?

The Lunch and Learn program offers free video education during lunch to your staff via break room screens. Through this program we bring together practices, pharmaceutical companies, and a ready technology solution. Simply sign up for an education session, indicate if you want optional catered lunch, and we will take care of the rest!

We have partnered with PatientPoint, a leading provider of practice technology solutions, to enable your staff to access information on the latest advances in cancer care, new products, treatment options, and other information necessary for patient care. Schedule a lunch and learn as often and for as many staff as you want.

How it Works

1. Practices indicate availability for lunchtime educational presentations. (There is no limit to the number of education sessions you can select.)
2. An optional free catered lunch can be ordered for your entire team on the day of the education session. (We handle the delivery and comply with COVID-19 requests and dietary restrictions.)
3. Educational content is shared via the TV screens installed in your lunch or break rooms – there is no work, downloads, or other setup needed.
4. Presentation continually broadcast to break room screens during a two-hour lunch break period, so your team can come and go as schedules permit.

How You Benefit

Trying to schedule virtual education or rep visits with companies piecemeal has proven to be difficult and time-consuming during COVID-19. The Lunch and Learn program allows for:

- Immediate resumption of pre-pandemic direct practice education.
- Your practice team to know about the most current cancer care developments.
- Boost staff morale with flexible lunchtime learning opportunities.
- All with no additional work, downloads, or additional staff effort.

How to Participate

Participation is simple, easy and gives you immediate access to educational opportunities. You can register quickly for the NCTA Lunch and Learn program by emailing Carrie Pernell (cpernell@nctacancer.com) to begin the signup process. Join us for this exciting opportunity for your team to continue to turn lunch time into learn time!

National Cancer Treatment Alliance™

The National Cancer Treatment Alliance (NCTA) is a national network of leading, independent community oncology practices that are making cancer care better. A benefit corporation (B Corp), NCTA is solely owned by the Community Oncology Alliance (COA). Working with a national network of independent, community oncology practices, NCTA provides information, resources, and education to employers and other stakeholders to improve our nation's cancer care system.
