"Ecoscape 3" by Heather Stivison

Water-media (acrylic and watercolor) on hot pressed archival paper. Framed Size (h x d): 18 x 12 in

"Ecoscape 3", one of a series of more than 30 artworks that use invented symbols and imagery loosely derived from the petroglyphs and Druid rock carvings created by early humans thousands of years ago. These ancient artists were intimately in-touch with the natural world — a connection that we 21st century Americans are sorely lacking. In this painting, ethereal shapes and symbols float on a field of blue air. The images of seeds suggest hope and transformation. The shapes also include constellations of dots and tiny circles that refer to molecules, underwater bubbles, and exploding stars. They remind us of the primordial soup that is the basis of all life on our fragile planet.
