J. MATTHEW ASHLEY, PH.D.

Associate Professor of Systematic Theology; Fellow,
Reilly Center for Science,
Technology, and Values

In the first years of his pontificate, Pope Francis has defied easy categorization in terms of the divisions that have plagued the Church over the past three decades. The first Pope from the global south, his pontificate marks an important turning point for the Catholic Church in more ways than one. This lecture examines Francis's pontificate by looking at how his experience as a Jesuit and as an Archbishop in Argentina has shaped his vision of the Church as a principal sign and instrument of God's mercy in the world, especially "on the margins."

Matthew Ashley is an associate professor of Systematic Theology in the Department of Theology. He has a B.S. in philosophy and physics from St. Louis University, a master's of theological studies degree from the Weston Jesuit School of Theology, and a Ph.D. in theology from the University of Chicago. Having authored or edited six books and numerous articles, Ashley's research focuses on theology and science and on the history of Christian spirituality. His most recent book is Take Lord and Receive, All My Memory: Toward an Anamnestic Mysticism.

Offered annually through Notre Dame's network of more than 200 alumni clubs, Hesburgh Lectures are delivered by ND faculty nominated by colleagues and deans of the University. The program honoring former ND president Rev. Theodore Hesburgh, C.S.C, encourages intellectual dialogue between alumni, community members, and ND faculty.
