

Communications Officer IV Brandon Henning

CO Brandon Henning has been selected as the November Communications Officer of the Month for his exceptional performances and dedication to the department. CO Henning began his career with the Department of Emergency Communications on August 9, 2007. He is willing to help the department reach challenging staffing goals, as demonstrated during the month of November.

In September and November CO Henning agreed to change his work schedule to train two CO's for fire radio operations. He is certified to train on the special position and has stepped up to the plate. He continues to work diligently to get the personnel released on the fire radio and available to assist with staffing shortages by early next year. This is the first time in departmental history someone has agreed to train two (2) employees on one position at the same time, on two different platoons. CO Henning has also agreed to assist the training division where he has written policies, plans and directives. In addition, he continues to work both night shift platoons during the shortage by volunteering to work overtime on his nights off.

CO Henning has gone above and beyond the call of duty by actively assisting the Department of Emergency Communications during the departmental training. He is pleasant to work with and is always willing to contribute in assisting any CO, ACOS or COS with their needs. The trait of teaching is something that is not taught. CO Henning has stepped up to the challenge with the contributing to personnel qualifications, skills, tools and resources. He has demonstrated the highest caliber of service that is expected of our personnel. His performance continues to soar, and he is an asset to the Department of Emergency Communications.
