Dispatches from Holden:

A Report on Erin Schultz's Volunteer Stay at Holden Village

By: Deacon David Webb

Erin arrived in Holden Village to start her extended volunteer work in the early part of January. Erin took a fifty hour Amtrak ride from Chicago to Spokane before catching a Gray Hound Bus to Wenatchee, a ferry up Lake Chelan, and a School Bus up eleven switch backs to Holden Village, which sits at an elevation of 3200 feet above sea level in the Cascade Mountains. At Holden, they have 79 inches of snow on the ground at the moment.

Erin's days start early in the village, that is a reclaimed copper mining village that became a Lutheran retreat center in the 1960's. Erin is a floater, who has been trained to do several jobs working in the library, in the house keeping department, food service, and the gift shop. She says she's already cleaned all the bathrooms on the property once.

In her free time Erin gets to live with a community from all over the world who are visiting or volunteering at Holden. January Term students from St. Olaf are taking a class at the village right now. Erin is learning to knit and the Scandinavian art of sauna. Erin reports that they rotate between steam baths and jumping into the snow. Erin quickly had to learn how to snow shoe and what to do in the event of an avalanche. In the coming month, an igloo engineer will teach a class to the volunteers on igloo construction in the wild. It also sounds like riding around in the village's antique Bombadier Snow Cats is also a favorite of the winter staff.

We give thanks for Erin's safe travel and the news that she is settling in to a great winter of spending time with friends in community and serving the church.

Why are we here? What are we here for? These words from our first week of Explore God as we considered “Does life have a purpose?” have been ringing out in my heart and soul ever since. For that week of focus was also paired with a conversation between 5 other Lutheran churches in Des Plaines, Mt. Prospect, Arlington Heights and Rolling Meadows as led by our Metro

Chicago Synod Bishop Wayne Miller. The purpose of the conversation was to seek out ways we can partner and support each other in ministry. Bishop Miller started the conversation by asking us: Why are you here? And then gave us the options of answering in one of the following ways:

- We are here to meet our needs. St. Mark as a congregation and the people within it have needs and we are here with the purpose to meet those needs.
- We are here to meet the community's needs. They have needs, we can meet them.
- We are here to meet God's needs. God is up to something, we are here to help meet what God needs so that God's dreams come into being.

It was fascinating to be faced with those possible answers and to work my way through them. The honest answer for most of us would probably be we are here for our needs. We come to church to fill the God-shaped hole in our hearts and lives, to experience the divine and the gifts of Christian community. If we got really honest, that on some level we are here to keep being here, that St. Mark's need at its base settles on continuing to exist in the future. The problem is that nowhere in scripture does it say the purpose of Christian community is to keep on existing in the way it always has. Nowhere. In fact, that answer sort of misses the point of all that Christ was about, that new life and good news part.

The second answer seems like a good one, possibly the right one in some ways as we are called to love our neighbor, to meet Jesus in the needs of the community--based in scripture and important. And yet, what this often translates into in ministry is what do “they” want, and how can we meet that need. As in, what do young families want? How can we be that to bring them in? What do people want in terms of music in worship? How can we do that? It creates a consumerist set up, where the church is a product to meet people's “needs” which are often really their wants. And the truth is wants are constantly in flux. It creates a situation where people consume a product, not build a community.

And so we come to the third answer. God is up to something, and God wants to partner with us in that endeavor. God needs something from us to accomplish God's work, because God has chosen to work through and with people. What does God need from us in this time and place? Asking this question leads us deeper into relationship with God, into discernment, and I would propose would meet the needs of the community and ours along the way. And yet, we are so often more likely to focus on what we need or even what the community needs. I wonder, what are we missing out on by not looking for what God needs from us. I wonder what answers you hear and see when you consider what God needs from us in this time and place. I wonder what powerful mission and ministry we have right before us as we consider and follow that question wherever it leads. I'm excited to find out, for us to find out together.

Peace in Christ,
Pr. Christie

Church is the work of the people and our youngest members have been sharing their gifts with us and making church a richer more meaningful experience. Students are reading the lessons, serving as assisting minister, preaching, serving communion, helping with children's church, and doing their weekly work (playing, crafting, singing, being joyful, etc).

Celebrating Christmas: Keeping the Decorations Up! And “The Season of Light and Dark”

By: Deacon David Webb

Celebrating Christmas as a professional Christian who works for a church that celebrates a typical liturgical observance of Christmas is a funny thing. My celebration and my immediate family's celebration of Christmas, happen primarily at church and with whatever time and energy are left we celebrate at home and with extended family. It's fun even though it's taken some getting used to. My main way of celebrating is doing nothing, wearing pajamas, and drinking tea. Those are not really things I can do during Christmas worship at St. Mark.

Thankfully January is a quiet moment in the church year and Christmas is 12 days long on the calendar, even if the radio station goes back to playing other music right away. Either way, there's plenty of time for celebrating, family, sleeping in, staying up late, candles, warm sweaters, cookies, pajamas, doing nothing, and tea.

Last year I was happy to continue the celebrating and leave the tree and decorations up until Candlemas (The Feast of the Presentation of Jesus at the Temple) on February 1. That's a little bit absurd even by goofball standards such as mine. I just love the festival and magic of Christmas. Time has an extraordinary quality in that week between Christmas and Epiphany. The lights, the decorations, and the celebration bring a certain life to the winter months that I have grown to love.

We celebrated with a live/cut Christmas tree this year so our décor had a certain life span this year that was not going to make it to February. I also got tired of finding Christmas tree ornaments everywhere but on the tree, because Thomas loved them all so much that he would take them down and play with them everywhere. The stairs were his favorite place. So we put the decorations away after Epiphany, but around the same time Christie and I both found books from Scandinavian writers who espoused obviously essential truths. #1 Candle light in a room is essential for happiness. #2 During the winter months, one should stop for a warm drink and a cookie at least 4 times a day.

So, my formal Christmas celebration was shorter this year than in past years, but after we read these obvious human truths we began celebrating this season of January and February called: “Ordinary Time” or “The Time After Epiphany,” under the new title, at our house anyway, “The Season of Light and Dark.” At dusk we light all the candles in the house and turn the main lights off. We put on warmer, comfier clothes. We say prayers about how God comforts us and keeps us warm and gives us the dark to help us rest and grow. We have been intentional about having warm conversations with each other or making phone calls to loved ones and savoring our conversations. Of course, I didn't have to work in the warm drinks into my daily schedule as they have been there all along.

It has been a great joy to do something so simple as light candles and celebrate warmth. It has also seemed like a natural extension of Christmas and continuation of Epiphany. I don't know why we didn't start this earlier. Anyway, I wonder how you've been continuing to celebrate? How have you used the “gifts” of Christmas, the tangible and intangible gifts you received this year? Have you been putting decorations away and tidying up? Have you been reflecting on your star word? Are you shoveling snow and doing maintenance on your snow blower? Maybe you're planning to go to Florida a few weeks earlier this year. I hope your celebration has been rich and continues to gift you with the new life and love that is born every year at Christmas.

Thoughts from the Loft

As we continue to "Explore God" throughout the month of February, I would like to suggest it is possible to explore God in music. Each Sunday the music that is chosen attempts to reflect the lessons for that day in some way. Sometimes the connections with the lessons are more obvious than others. The vocal choir anthems reflect general themes for the day while bell choir anthems are often times based on hymns that reflect a theme. I admit we sometimes need to adapt, but it is my hope that each Sunday the music feeds our spirit as we worship God. So, be sure to explore God in our musical hymns and offerings throughout the year!

Peace!
Tim

Dear St. Mark Lutheran Church,

Thank you very much for the beautiful poinsettia plant. It was a big surprise to find it in my room (Highlands Assisted Living) along with the wonderful card and greeting. It has been many years since I was a member of St Mark, but have many fond memories as a member. Thank you again. Blessings in the New Year.

Update on Columbarium/Memorial Garden Project

As of late January, 17 niche reservations have been completed, and there are 9 more in process. The donations received through reservations and other gifts total about $27,000. Adding in the memorial funds ($16,440) for Mary Ann Anderson, Len Bazan, Joni Beaudry, and LeRoy Reents results in a total of $43,500 in donations to date. We anticipate that new reservations will bring this to a total of $57,000 by early summer which will cover the cost of the columbarium and the construction. A very special thanks to all who have given money as well as volunteer labor and materials to this new ministry.

The manufacturer of the columbarium, Armento, is so pleased with the design and appearance of our installation that they have included a photo of it in a new ad that they are running in the March issue of The Living Lutheran, the monthly periodical of the ELCA.

The columbarium brochure is being updated to provide current information. If you have any questions regarding the use of the columbarium, please call the church office, or contact one of the committee members.

We are now working with a landscape architect, Gage Berger, from Gary R. Weber Associates in Wheaton to develop a final plan for a memorial garden. We had a preliminary meeting with him in November to hear his rationale for the initial sketch proposal and receive input. The committee will have a second meeting Monday, February 18 at 7:00 p.m. to respond to his revised plan. All who are interested in this project are invited to attend.

This project will provide a significant upgrade to the external appearance of our property and provide a setting for meditation and reflection, as well as a place where a loved one's ashes can be incorporated into the soil. Once the committee agrees on the final plan, actual construction will depend on sufficient funding from memorials, donations, and the columbarium fund.
