

Fall Courses at Lewiston-Auburn Senior College

At the Lewiston-Auburn Senior College, the fall term is shaping up to be both varied and interesting. The foodies among us will be happy to see several offerings from chef Larry Canepa, including “Superfoods for a Super Hero’s Life.” There are also a number of courses focused on science and nature, including a course on the moon from Alan Seamans and one on the science of evolution from Richard Fortier.

There will be courses on current events and politics, including Jean Potuchek’s “American Values,” which will explore the proposition that we can reduce our current political polarization through an emphasis on shared values. Those interested in issues of religion or ethics can take Anita Denis’s course on “Philosophy of Religion” or Bill Frayer’s on “Truth, Curiosity, and Ethics.” For the history buffs, we have Alan Elze’s class on “The Lincoln Highway” and Chuck Parker’s course on “The History of the Ottoman Empire.” In the arts, Ariela Zucker will facilitate a writers’ group, and we will once again partner with the Lewiston Public Theatre for “Behind the Scenes: Public Theatre’s Production of Steel Magnolias.” We are also happy to be continuing our partnership with the Auburn Public Library for a series of “Senior College in the Community” programs and to be offering two courses in partnership with Sunrise Senior College.

About half of our fall courses will be on Zoom and half in person. The full listing of fall courses will be available on the L-A Senior College website at on or about August 10. Registration for these classes will open in mid-August, and classes will begin in early September.
