Cuisine

The Andaman is a paradise for seafood lovers and there is a huge variety of crabs, lobsters, prawns and fish to look forward to. Rice is the staple here due to large-scale paddy cultivation. Coconut, along with fruits such as mango, sapodilla, banana and pineapple is also commonly grown. Being a cultural melting pot, the Andamans also offers a wide range of culinary choice, including Bengali and Andhra food. Similarly, the abundant use of coconut, spices and coconut oil reveals a strong Kerala influence. One may also enjoy North Indian cuisine and Mughlai food. Most of the popular restaurants are located in Havelock and Port Blair.

Art and Craft

The main handicrafts in Andaman are made from the raw materials found in the islands, such as forest products and marine life. Padauk, Badam and Gurjan are the main varieties of useful timbers. Canes and bamboo are commonly found too. Marine life includes coral, driftwood, shells and seaweeds, with tortoise and turbo shells being quite popular. Exotic wood crafts, ornaments from sea-shells and palm mats are much sought after.

Woodwork and carpentry are the local crafts of Andaman. Furniture and other wooden articles are made from ornamental woods such as Marble Wood, Padauk and Chui. The tabletops made from Paduak burr are singular works of handicrafts in these islands. Beautifully crafted statues are also made. Cane is largely used for making baskets and furniture.

The shell crafts include ashtrays, lamps, buttons and jewelry made from the polished, decorative shells. Tortoise shell is used in table lamps, boxes and decorative items. Similarly, coconut shells are used in finger bowls, table lamps and other products.
