AIPAC UPDATE: FEB. 8, 2019

U.S. to Purchase Israel's Iron Dome Missile Defense, Citing 'Immediate Need'

The U.S. military said Wednesday it plans to buy a limited number of Iron Dome missile defense systems from Israel to fill a short-term need for interim indirect fire protection capability, Haaretz reported. "The Iron Dome will be assessed and experimented as a system that is currently available to protect deployed U.S. military service members against a wide variety of indirect fire threats and aerial threats," the U.S. army said in a statement. According to a statement from Israel's Defense Ministry, the American military told Israel it had decided to purchase the systems "for immediate needs of the U.S. army."

Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, who also serves as defense minister, called this a "great achievement for Israel" and "further proof of our solid bond with the U.S., as well of Israel's rising status in the world." "Israel has an Iron Dome and an iron fist. Our systems can face any threat," Netanyahu added. The purchase will be made as part of an agreement between Israel's Defense Ministry and the U.S. Department of Defense. Iron Dome's Israeli manufacturer, state-owned Rafael Advanced Defense Systems Ltd., confirmed the deal without providing further details.
