After years of steady growth, Houston METRO's bus and rail ridership has experienced a sharp drop since the emergence of the coronavirus pandemic in Harris County in March of 2020.

We listened to transit-reliant Houston communities hit hard by Covid-19 to better understand the pandemic's effect on Houstonians' relationship with public transportation (access, utilization, future plans) in order to inform what local, state and federal policy proposals and/or investments should be prioritized moving forward.
