

Bridgeway CEO Cory Storch Spoke at U.S. Senate Briefing on Housing, Disability Rights, and Community Inclusion

Cory Storch, President and CEO of Bridgeway Behavioral Health Services, spoke at a U.S. Senate briefing focused on housing, disability rights, and the importance of community-based supports for people with disabilities.

The briefing, “Keys to the Community: Housing that Supports People with Disabilities to Live in Their Own Homes and Communities,” was hosted by the Bazelon Center for Mental Health Law on Wednesday, June 24, 2026, in the Russell Senate Office Building in Washington, D.C.

The event commemorated the anniversary of the landmark Supreme Court decision Olmstead v. L.C., which affirmed the right of people with disabilities to live and receive services in the most integrated setting appropriate to their needs.

Cory joined national advocates, housing experts, service providers, and people with lived experience for a discussion on why safe, stable, accessible housing is essential to independence, recovery, wellness, and full participation in community life.

For Bridgeway, this issue is central to its mission. Across New Jersey, Bridgeway provides behavioral health services and community-based supports that help individuals live with dignity, build stability, and remain connected to their communities.

“True recovery and independence are only possible when people have access to the supports, services, and housing they need to live safely in the community,” said Cory Storch. “Bridgeway was proud to be part of this important national conversation.”

The briefing also featured speakers from the Bazelon Center for Mental Health Law, Corporation for Supportive Housing, National Coalition for the Homeless, Pathways to Housing DC, and other leaders working to advance housing access and disability rights.

Bridgeway was honored to have its voice represented in Washington, D.C. as part of this timely and meaningful discussion.

Photo caption:

Cory Storch, President and CEO of Bridgeway Behavioral Health Services, in Washington, D.C., where he spoke at a U.S. Senate briefing on housing, disability rights, and community-based supports.

