to the 2010 Census. I have reached out to organizations and the feedback feels as if no one wants to assist me in what I should be doing and who I should be coordinating things with. I don't know who I should be reaching out to or what I should be requesting or how I request assistance. Lockington may be small, however, we are people, too, and Lockington is a high-risk community largely made up of the elderly, disabled, and children and it has been challenging for anyone to take me seriously. I also do not believe members of the community are taking the virus seriously as children have been socializing and playing in groups since the school closure. Small local governments could use assistance, guidance, and mentors anyway, but we could really use these things now.
