

Cotlook's January supply and demand forecasts indicate a reduction in seasonal ending stocks

The past month has seen a considerable reduction in Cotlook's forecast of raw cotton output during the 2021/22 season. Sharp decreases for India and the United States have been only marginally offset by modest increases for China and smaller producing countries. Consumption was also lowered, with a small adjustment entirely for China. Hence, global cotton stocks are forecast to decline by 254,000 tonnes by the end of 2021/22, compared with an increase of 27,000 tonnes put forward a month ago.

Cotlook's estimates of raw cotton production and consumption during the 2020/21 season have been maintained in our January assessment. World stocks are therefore estimated to have decreased by 1,374,000 tonnes by July 31, 2021.

Initial forecasts for the 2022/23 season will be published in one month's time.
