Unlined Landfill Trainer Bios

Eddie Galvin has over a decade's worth of civil and geotechnical engineering experience within the solid waste industry including permitting, design, reviewing, compliance, and construction of disposal airspace facilities across New England and the country. He is a Senior Project Manager for Sanborn, Head & Associates, Inc. He coordinates and works with his team on complex landfill challenges with ever-changing permitting requirements. Eddie works closely with his clients to maintain compliance and prepare both design and construction level packages for state regulators and contractors alike. He works with a variety of private and municipal clients yearly to ensure that their active and closed landfills remain in compliance with the Solid Waste Rules.

Jaime Colby joined NHDES in 2016. Prior to joining NHDES, she worked in private consulting where she specialized in geotechnical and environmental issues relating to site redevelopment. She is currently supervisor of the Engineering & Permitting Section in the Solid Waste Management Bureau. Jaime has a BS in Civil Engineering from Norwich University, a MS in Civil Engineering from Virginia Tech, and a Master's in Environmental Law & Policy from Vermont Law School. She is a registered Professional Engineer and a Certified Public Supervisor.

Emily Jones began her NHDES career in 2005, first working in the Air Resources Division as a compliance and enforcement intern. Emily joined the NHDES Drinking Water and Groundwater Bureau's Enforcement Section in 2006 where she managed the compliance of multiple programs, drafted rules and administrative actions, and developed a complaint tracking and inspection program. In her last three years in the bureau, Emily supervised the section. In December of 2021, Emily became the Compliance Assurance Section Supervisor for the Solid Waste Management Bureau. Emily has a Bachelor's degree in Political Science and Public Policy with a concentration in criminal and civil law from Castleton University and is a Certified Public Supervisor.
