The Chaos Gremlin Buffet Begins Here

We start with neatly lined bowls....and within seconds:

- Food on the walls
- Tails in the formula
- One overachiever scaling a volunteer's leg
- Someone asleep in the kibble

Dry food is one of our biggest needs — we go through it nonstop, especially during kitten season.

Welcome to the Never-Ending Paté Parade

Our tiniest residents thrive on wet food - and we use a lot of cans every day. Whether they're wearing it, stepping in it, or occasionally eating it, kitten pates keep kittens growing strong.

Gerber for Growing Kittens

For kittens learning to eat, Gerber meat baby food is pure magic: gentle, nutritious, and easy for tiny tummies. It's one of our most-used essentials.

Tiny Beans, Tiny Bodies, Big Stakes

For kittens under 8 weeks, a few ounces can mean the difference between thriving and declining.

Weight is the #1 indicator of health, hydration, and early illness. Many kittens are weighed daily — fragile kittens twice a day.

Adding more small digital scales helps our foster homes catch problems early and save lives.

For the Tummies with Attitude

Some of our cats have sensitive tummies — which is a polite way of saying we see things we can't unsee.

FortiFlora helps calm their digestion, support their immune systems, and keep everyone (including our volunteers) a little happier.

For Mystery Goo and Other Adventures

Rescue life means wiping mystery goo off kitten butts, cleaning eye crust with surgical precision, and scrubbing questionable substances off walls, floors, and sometimes our own shoes.

We use a lot of gloves every week - especially in Large and Extra Large.

For Cats Who Think Medicine Is Optional

Giving liquid medicine to cats is an Olympic sport. Our staff and volunteers are brave souls armed with syringes, patience, and optimism.

We rely heavily on 1 mL and 3 mL syringes for daily medical care.

Welcome to GERMAGEDDON

Just when one surface is disinfected, a kitten sneezes, a senior scoots across the floor, and someone misses the litter box by half an inch.

Bleach and wipes aren't just supplies — they're survival.

The Trash Never Stops — Neither Do We

Caring for cats means caring for the messes they leave behind. We go through garbage bags constantly — litter scooping, food cans, cleaning supplies, and the occasional “we don’t talk about that” situation.

Strong, unscented garbage bags help us keep every room clean and safe.

Laundry: The Extreme Sport of Cat Rescue

Every load tells a story: mystery fur, a rogue toy mouse, and the faint scent of "eau de catnip."

HE laundry detergent keeps blankets, beds, and towels fresh — until a cat claims them again five seconds later.
